Global Asset Backed Securities Fund

MORTGAGE & SECURITIZED TEAM

Performance Review

In the three month period ending 30 June 2024, the Fund's Z shares returned 1.44% (net of fees)<sup>1</sup>, while the benchmark returned 0.07%.

The Fund (Z shares net of fees) outperformed the Bloomberg U.S. Mortgage-Backed Securities (MBS) Index (the "Index") by 137 basis points in the quarter.<sup>2</sup>

The Fund had no negative sector returns on an absolute basis for the quarter. The portfolio's outperformance was primarily due to its global non-agency residential mortgage-backed securities (RMBS), U.S. commercial mortgage-backed securities (CMBS) and global asset-backed securities (ABS) exposures given their strong cash flow carry and spreads tightening in these sectors over the quarter. These securities also have a shorter duration profile and, thus, were not as negatively impacted by the rise in rates. The second major source of outperformance was the portfolio's underweight to agency mortgage-backed securities (MBS)—specifically to lower coupon, fixed-rate pass-throughs—as agency spreads were unchanged and interest rates sold off. Even the Fund's allocation to agency MBS outperformed the Index, as our overweight to higher coupon MBS outperformed lower coupon MBS due to the longer duration of lower coupon MBS, which were, therefore, more negatively impacted by the rise in interest rates.

Given that securitized credit spreads did tighten during the quarter, the fact that most global CMBS and global ABS assets have floating-rate or short-duration structures meant they were the least negatively impacted by the rise in rates and, thus, were some of the largest sector contributors to performance on a relative basis.

The Fund's relative duration positioning helped relative performance slightly as the Fund's duration remained shorter than that of the Index during the quarter.

Market Review

U.S. interest rates rose and the yield curve steepened during the second quarter as strong economic data led to the Federal Reserve (Fed) signaling that it will likely wait longer to cut rates. Market expectations for rate cuts fell from 150 basis points to 50 basis points for 2024.<sup>3</sup> The Fed kept rates unchanged at 5.25% during the quarter and indicated cuts in the remainder of 2024 would be largely data-dependent. The Fed also continued letting its MBS holdings run off during the quarter, which declined by $53 billion during the quarter to $2.327 trillion.<sup>4</sup> U.S. commercial banks' agency MBS holdings increased during the second quarter by approximately $36 billion to $2.576 trillion, but bank holdings are still down by $424 billion since early 2022.<sup>3</sup> We expect the Fed's MBS holdings to decline through the remainder of 2024. The 30-year mortgage rates rose 7 basis points during the quarter from 6.79% to 6.86%.<sup>3</sup> MBS current coupon nominal spreads widened 10 basis points during the quarter to 149 basis points above interpolated U.S. Treasuries. The Index returned 0.07% during the quarter, underperforming U.S. Treasuries by 6 basis points on a duration-adjusted basis. Agency MBS underperformed U.S. Treasuries by 76 basis points for all of 2023 on a duration-adjusted basis. The duration of the Index was unchanged at 5.7 years, and the majority of the outstanding U.S. mortgage market remains "out-of-the-money" to refinance with new origination mortgage rates still at historically high levels.<sup>3</sup>

Current coupon agency MBS spreads are slightly wider year-to-date, while nearly all other sectors have tightened. Agency MBS still look attractive, both from a historical perspective and relative to other asset classes. Agency MBS supply-demand dynamics have improved as the Fed continues to let its agency MBS holdings run off, but U.S. banks and foreign entities have increased their holdings recently. New MBS supply remains low as mortgage origination has been very slow due to higher mortgage rates, but MBS demand also is also expected to be weak. We expect U.S. home prices to remain relatively stable, as the difficult affordability is counterbalanced by the lack of housing supply. We expect mortgage rates to decline slightly, but not sufficiently enough to meaningfully impact affordability.

Securitized credit spreads tightened in the second quarter of 2024, but yields still remain very attractive, both from a relative value and historical perspective. Fundamental credit conditions have deteriorated with high inflation (although real wages have now turned positive) and higher debt costs eroding consumer balance sheets, but we still believe that high quality RMBS, CMBS and ABS remain very well protected from a structural perspective, even under more stressful conditions.

Portfolio Activity

Our agency MBS exposure fell by 1% from 40% to 39% during the second quarter as spreads tightened at the end of March, and we trimmed our positioning at the beginning of April for more attractive credit-oriented opportunities. Spreads widened 10 basis points over the quarter to +149 basis points above interpolated U.S. Treasuries, one of the few sectors that is actually wider year-to-date. Therefore, we have moved from a neutral stance on the asset class to a slightly positive view.

Over the period, our U.S. RMBS holdings rose 4% to 20% as this sector remains our favorite and our non-U.S. non-agency exposure fell 1% to 16% as we continue to look for opportunities to reduce our European securities in favor of comparable U.S. securities. Our U.S. CMBS fell 1% to 6%, and our European CMBS holdings fell 1% to 5%. Our U.S. ABS exposures rose 1% to 11% and our non-U.S. ABS holdings fell 1% to 3%.

Strategy and Outlook

After several months of spread tightening across securitized products through May, we saw spreads widen slightly and stabilize in June. We expect spreads to stabilize at current levels in July as securitized credit spreads are approaching agency MBS spread levels, given the differentiated performance over the past several months. Overall demand levels remain strong, but we believe it will be challenging to push spreads much tighter from current levels. Securitized credit sectors have been among the best performing sectors in 2024, but performance should continue to normalize in the coming months. We also believe rates will likely remain rangebound for much of 2024 and returns will result primarily from cash flow carry in the coming months.

We still believe current rate levels remain stressful for many borrowers and will continue to erode household balance sheets, causing stress for some consumer ABS, particularly involving lower income borrowers. Commercial real estate also remains challenged by current financing rates, and some sectors may see declines in operating revenue in 2024. Residential mortgage credit opportunities remain our favorite sector currently and is the one sector where we remain comfortable going down the credit spectrum, as we remain more cautious regarding lower rated ABS and CMBS.

We have moved from a neutral to a positive view on agency MBS valuations, which is one of very few sectors that has cheapened up this year so far. They continue to remain attractive versus investment grade corporate spreads and versus historical agency MBS spreads, but we believe agency MBS spreads have stabilized.

We remain most constructive on RMBS and residential-related investments. Most homeowners have locked in 30-year fixed rate mortgages at substantially lower mortgage rates and have not faced payment shocks from higher rates. Additionally, the substantial home price appreciation over the past few years has meaningfully increased homeowner equity, which is at its highest level in more than 40 years.<sup>3</sup> Lastly, residential mortgage lending standards have remained very conservative in the post-financial crisis era, and mortgage credit performance continues to be pristine with very minimal delinquencies and defaults.

We remain much more cautious on commercial real estate exposure, especially the office sector. Higher financing costs have stressed all commercial real estate sectors, but sectors such as hotels, multi-family housing and retail shopping centers have seen healthy revenue growth to help offset the higher financing costs. The office sector has felt the brunt of both declining revenue and higher financing costs.

We also remain cautious on consumer ABS, as inflation, higher rates and declining government stimulus have begun to strain consumer balance sheets, especially for lower-income borrowers. The savings surplus built up during the pandemic has now been depleted, and we expect more consumer stress for the remainder of 2024. We are more constructive on business-related ABS, such as aircraft leases, mortgage-servicing rights and small business loans.

We believe central banks are now at the end of their hiking cycles; rates have seen their peak levels and will likely decline through the remainder of 2024. Much of the projected rate decline has now been priced into the market, but we still expect the path forward for rates will likely be lower than current levels.

We continue to prefer U.S. securitized opportunities over U.K. and European-securitized markets. U.S. spreads are currently wider than comparable credit-profile European/U.K. opportunities, yet we believe the U.S. credit landscape is more favorable. European inflation has been slower to recede, and economic growth looks to be weaker in Europe. Geopolitical risks also remain higher in Europe.

Our base forecast is for a mild recession, which we do not believe would have a material impact on our securities' performance. However, we also believe our securities could handle a severe recession, given that they were designed with the Global Financial Crisis as a stress test. We remain watchful of ongoing geopolitical risks as well as broader economic risks across the globe. Despite these risks, we remain excited about the Fund's return potential for the remainder of 2024.

Overall, we believe the securitized market offers a unique opportunity to achieve competitive returns with solid credit fundamentals. Although volatility has increased and credit conditions are weaker, we remain constructive on securitized credit conditions overall—specifically in the U.S.—with the U.S. economy remaining strong and housing and consumer credit conditions continuing to be relatively healthy. As a result of these views, we have a meaningful credit overweight in the Fund, but we have increased our U.S. agency MBS position to its highest level in several years (39%), given our concerns of deteriorating economic conditions.
